Front Cover—A drawing of a juvenile male American marten (Martes americana) walking across a log within the Chequamegon-Nicolet National Forest in October 2001. An article by McCann et al. (pages 369-381) demonstrates how spatial scale affects the match between functional and structural habitat, by backtracking American marten and fisher (Pekania pennanti) and determining that fine-scale structural habitat data detected greater selection and path tortuosity within hemlock-cedar, while broad-scale structural habitat data did not. Drawing by Gabriela Sincich based upon a photograph taken by John Wright.
